MOUNTAINS IN THE ATLANTIC. - FOUR years ago the British government sent out an expedition to map the bottom of the Atlantic ocean. The work is now about completed and a report has been issued. It shows that if the water were drained away the bed of the ocean would show a vast plain traversed near the center by a mountain range running parallel with the American coast. Another range running, almost at right angles to this, extends from Newfoundland to Ireland. In a general way these facts were known be-fore, but it is now ascertained that the tops of these sea mountains are about two miles below the surface and that the basins, instead of being "unfathomed depths," are about four and one-half miles below the surface. Of course this is far enough, but one would a great deal rather know that the bottom is five miles down than to the bottom is five miles down than to be told that its location has not been ascertained. The latter is so utterly hopeless. A curious fact regarding the mountains is that the tops are as white as though they lay in the region of perpetual snow. The reason for this, according to the Rochester Post-Experess, is that the mountains are thickly covered with a species of pure white shells. The legends of the lost Atlantis are borne out by the finding of "an tis are borne out by the finding of "an elevated plateau, the shape and extent of which corresponds to the size of the lost Atlantis almost exactly.
